Danish fastelavn

In Denmark, fastelavn is usually celebrated in February.

On fastelavn, a tradition is slå katten af tønden. It literally means hitting the cat out of the barrel. The barrel can be filled with sweets or decorations. Children and adults now dress up in different costumes to hit the barrel with a bat.

The person who breaks the barrel is called "kattedronning" (cat queen), and the person who breaks the final board is called "kattekonge" (cat king). They both get golden crowns made of plastic or paper.

People also eat fastelavnsboller. They are buns filled with whipped cream, jam, or custard.

Another tradition is rasle (rattle), which is like trick-or-treating. Children dress in costumes with special clothes, wigs, and face paint to look like other people or things. They go door to door to sing a song about fastelavn and get money or sweets.
