Leaf peeping

Ten-year-old Jake woke up early and excited. Today his family was going "leaf peeping" in the mountains of Vermont. He put on his favourite cozy sweater and his sturdy boots, ready for the crisp October air.

Jake pressed his face against the window, as they drove up into the mountains. The forests were no longer green, but were painted in red, orange, and yellow. "Look, Dad! That mountain looks like it's on fire!" Jake shouted.

The family stopped at a lookout where the air smelled of pine and damp earth. Jake ran through the woods, listening to the satisfying crunch, crunch, crunch of the fallen leaves beneath his feet. He spent the afternoon collecting the most colorful maple leaves he could find, hoping to save them in his scrapbook. On his way through the forest, he spotted deer, squirrels, and even a fox.

Jake really loved "leaf peeping" and he looked forward to seeing the leaves change colour every year in the fall.
